PIONEERS' DAY PARADE PROVES TO BE PAGEANT OF PROGRESS

Indian Drays, Automobiles, Ox-Carts and Motor Trucks Appear in the Different Sections of the First Annual Parade in Honor of the Old Timers; The City Departments Make Splendid Showings.

Pages of El Paso history were turned back a half century Wednesday morning when the Ploneers Day parade moved through the streets of El Paso. Floats in the pageant represented the march of El Paso's programment of El Paso when the planeers who blazed the trail across the desert. The eld oxearts and stage coaches and the early mode of transportation were shown in the parade and many of the men who came to El Paso when it was only a little froutler town rode in these historic old conveyances.

Crowds See Parade.

Spectators crowded the line of march to witness the pageant, which is the first event of its kind ever held in the city. The parade formed in front of the Elas club on Myrtle and Campbell and was more than a mile in length.

The parade was led by a squad of mounted police, headed by chief of police 1. N. Davis. Following them marched the 16th infantry band. Judge P. E. Hunter, grand marshal of the parade, and his aides, Randolph Terry and Will Crosby; mounted on horseback, followed the band.

Drawn by a team of 18 black artiflery horses, a stage coach owned by the Hearst runch in Mexico and entered in the procession by the Elas lodge, followed. In this historic old stage rode the charter members of the local lodge of Elas. The horses from the sixth artiflery were ridden by the soldiers from the three hatteries of the sixth and addrom the artillery rode alongside of the coach. In the coach rode Dr. G. H. Neose Have Float.

El Paso lodge of Moose had one of the most interesting floats in the parade. It was drawn by two gray horses. On the front of the float was a tent in front of which F. C. Standish, attired as a plomeer, stood with a gun in his hands. The rear of the float was a paim garden in which several small children sat with their parents. A large banner on the side of the float read, "Million Dollar Sanitarium for El Paso." On the rear of the float was a banner with a quotation about the "Mooseheart," home of the lodge located hear Chicago, where orphan children age cared for.

Fionts and automobile trucks followed the Moose float. They were entered in the parade by local houses.

The virtual arrest of Gutlerrez by Villa is said to have decided Gen. Gonzales to declare for Carranza. During Tuesday morning Gonzales, who had returned from Cordoba, where he interviewed Carranza, to Queretare, was in conference by wire with Gen, Gutlerrez at Aguascalientes. At about moon when Gonzales again attempted to renew the conference, he was informed that Gen. Gutlerrez had been "requested" to cause entirely giving out any further statements. Battle at Silne Reported

The stand of Gen. Gonzales, it is expected here, will mean a definite ending of all parleys and the outbreak of hostilities on a large scale.

According to reports received here wednesday there has been a sharp fight at Silao. The Villa troops were under Angeles and the Carrancistas were commanded by Gen. Dieguez. According to reports received by Carranza officials here, the Villstas were forced to retire.

Gonzales is known to have a large force with a considerable amount of artillery, stationed at Queretaro, but Villatrey, stationed at Queretaro, but Villatrey, stationed at Queretaro, but Villatrey, stationed at Queretaro, but Villatro by Villa troops of many points on the rallroad. This fact, it is believed, has prevented willa from ordering a general mevement from San Luir Potosi against Tampico, as the northern leader fears a flank attack by the Gonzales forces.

Desertions at Mexico City.

Reports have been received here of wholesale desertions in the Carranza ranks at Mexico City, but it is believed by Carrancistas that this will be stopped now that Gen Alvaro Obregon has laken charge. The desertions were more frequent among the noncommissioned officers, who charged that discrimination was being shown by many of the officers. A general increase in wages of "noncoms' has been ordered and this is expected to have a good effect.

Expert Describes Method For Insuring Success of Indoor Gardens.

Washington D. C., Nov. 18.—The indoor window box, properly planned and tended, will afford much pleasure and satisfaction to the housewife who misses her out-of-door garden during the winter months. It is a mistaken notion that plants when kept in living rooms use up certain elements of the air in such quantities as to make it unhealthful for individuals using the room.

It is much harder on plants to be in a room with people than for people to be in a room with people than for people to be in a room with growing plants. Plants, indeed, use air, but use such a small proportion that the effect of the plant in the room is negligible if the room is ventilated at all. This also holds good for cut flowers or plants in a sick room, although the odor of some flowers may be depressing to the patient, and bad for that reason.

Window Ber Fleserihed.

Window Box Described.

A good depth for an indoor window box is about 12 inches. The bottom of the box should be covered with stones and broken pottery to give drainage and this should be covered by a layer of moss to prevent the soil above from working down through the stenes. The drainage and moss should take up about three inches. The greater the body of sort above the moss the more uniform it may be kept as to moisture. The soil should come to within an inch and a half or two inches of the top of the box.

The indoor window box should be made to fit into the window. To get as much light as possible it should be level with the window. It may be fastened with brackets or placed on a table, or have legs made for it. There should be a drip pan beneath to keep water from soiling the floor. The box may rest directly above the drippan on legs half an inch to an inch high or the box may be water-tight with the exception of a hole at one end to let out the water.

Watering is important.

The ton of the soil should be allowed Window Box Described.

to let out the water.

Watering is Important.

The top of the soil should be allowed to become quite dry once in a while. The results of watering will teach the owner to regulate the supply. Boxes may need watering in sunshing wenther (especially toward spring) every day, or at least every other day, in cloudy mid-winter weather not more than once a week. As a rule it is better to water lightly and frequently than heavily and infrequently. The specialist of the department of agriculture advises this, although just the reverse is considered best when watering is done out of doors in the summer.

One Chas of Plowers Beat.

A large proportion of the plants in a window box should be of the same general character if the growth is to be successful. Plants of different character need different treatment, it is very difficult to raise flowering plants in a window box with the exception of begonias. Ordinary flowering stants are very exacting and will not find enough light in the ordinary living room, even though placed near the window, although they may do well in a conservatory. The main object of an indoor window box is to furnish the fresh appearance of growing green leaves rather than to raise flowers indoors. One Class of Flowers Best.

eaves rather than to raise howers inloops.

The department of agriculture's specialist makes the following suggestions for a window box:

Begonias are one of the most attractive plants that may be used for an indoor box. Both flowering and nonflowering varieties will give satisfaction; in fact, the flowering variety is one of the few plants that will blossom indoors without special cultivation. The begonia is not very particular in its pegonia is not very particular in its requirements and will flourish with ordinary care.

Ferns Do Well Indoors. Small ferms obtained from a florist will flourish. These are particularly adapted to house culture, as they do not require direct sunlight.

Even more hardy than forms is the foliage plant known as the aspidistra. This adaptal's plant-growth will stand a measure of neglect, drouth, and dust and still thrive. It does not require sunlight sunlight.

Geraniums may also be used as foliage plants, though they must not be expected to blossom in the window box. Kenilworth lvy may be planted along the edge. It will grow nicely from seed. Smilax may be grown from the back of the box, and trained up about the window to give the effect of an attractive bower.

Rossa Need Grent Care.

Roses Need Great Care. Roses Need Great Care.

The inexperienced grower of plants indoors cannot expect to do well with roses. These plants are most exacting, and not only will they probably fall to flower, but also their foliage may be affected by mildew and blight.

The ordinary individual who desired other varieties of growing flowers, may supplement his window box with flowering potted plants brought in from outside, including bulbs raised as described in a previous article of this series. These will probably keep their
